ALGORITHMIC ART EXHIBIT & ARTIST TALK

TUESDAY, APRIL 5 | 6:30 PM

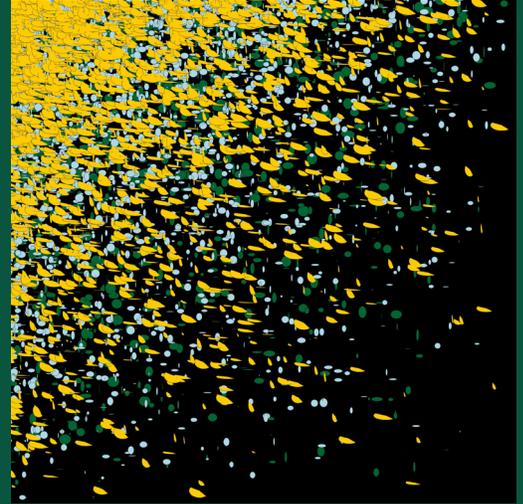

Algorithmic Art is a collection of works by Ganapathy Mahalingham, all created in 2022, that explores the frontiers of using algorithms to create works of visual art. All the works in the show are created using the programming language, Processing, and image processing tools.

Each work's narrative is the actual algorithmic code that created it. This algorithmic code is composed of elements that reveal a more conventional narrative within it, hidden and intermittently revealing itself. Taking its cue from the ancient Indian system of Katapayadi, where numbers are assigned to letters, and computations are performed through text and poetry, this process of creating visual art, explores symbol systems in a critical new way, and how they can be processed using multi-layered techniques to create meaningful expressions of visual art. Unlike conventional narratives that evoke meaning, these symbolic narratives actuate the creation of visual works of art. Then a conventional discourse emerges for the visual work that has been generated.

Artist Talk for the show Algorithmic Art, on display at the Flakoll Gallery in Renaissance Hall. Online via Zoom.

ARCHITECTURE STUDENT WORK ON DISPLAY THROUGH FRIDAY, APRIL 8TH

The Memorial Union Gallery at North Dakota State University is pleased to present new work from NDSU's Master of Architecture Program. These heavily conceptual works distill a wide range of values, philosophies, historical references and personal interpretation to convey the essence of a complex issue. While independent and engaging objects, these artefacts are one part of much larger inquiry into how these student's can create more informed and integral structures that consider space, situation and purpose. This exhibition features artefacts by Ashton Barta, Luke Devries, Jay Forbes, Trevor Guck, Luke Gulbranson, Daniel Ness, Daniel Porwoll, Amanda Scott, and Gabriella Toquam.

SODAA STUDENT SHAYNA KARUMAN INDUCTED INTO NDSU TAPESTRY OF INCLUSION

Four members of the NDSU community were inducted into the Memorial Union's Tapestry of Inclusion during a ceremony on Wednesday, March 9 in the Anishinaabe Theater. The honorees are:

- Shayna Karuman, graduate Architecture student
- Jamee Larson, Tyrel Iron Eyes, Hollie Mackey

"The deserving recipients of this recognition actively commit to creating a campus community where differences are seen as strengths and where everyone feels as if they belong. They strive to make NDSU a community based on respect and where all members can be their authentic selves and therefore thrive," said Lisa Samuelson, director of student activities.

The Tapestry of Inclusion is a program of the Student Activities Office. The pictorial mosaic recognizes students, faculty, staff and alumni for their contributions to diversity at NDSU. Formerly called the Tapestry of Diverse Talents, its inductees support and advocate for inclusion at NDSU on the basis of age, gender expression/identity, mental and physical ability, race, socioeconomic status, religion, sex, sexual orientation and veteran status of the university community.

SODAA STUDENT ABBY BROWN NOMINATED FOR OLMSTED SCHOLAR AWARD

Abby Brown, MLA '22 is the NDSU nominee for the prestigious Landscape Architecture Foundation Olmsted Scholar Award.

“Attending school at North Dakota State University I discovered how I could make a difference in the communities that shape us into who we are today. This education gives me the tools to identify and problem-solve issues that impact groups of individuals while making me realize how important each small voice is amongst a crowd. Our landscape bridges the gap between buildings that provide us the opportunity for growth in our lives. If these “bridges” are not functioning properly, we begin to have gaps in our society that can go unrecognized for years. To make sense of my personal experience growing up, I brought these questions to my educational work. This had led me into my passion of investigating equity, community togetherness and circulation within mobile home parks.”
